When 'Get Out' Is the Entire Strategy

By RUSSELL SIMON
WASHINGTON — President Obama is once again pursuing a national security strategy in which he tells the world he is ready to use military force if necessary against Syria, a move that could propel America into another Middle Eastern war. It is a new twist in an old theme:

The strategy of democracy.
A push to shield witness's identity

Democrats try to secure whistleblower testimony, avoid Republican leaks

BY RACHEL BIDWELL, GUNILLA MULLAUG, ELLEN BERRIDGE AND RACHAEL BERNSTEIN

Military personnel are using extraordinary steps to shield the whistle-blower whose complaint prompted an investigation that led to the impeachment of President Donald Trump.

Trump's legal team has been forced to rely on a series of measures to protect the individual, according to three officials familiar with the deliberations.

The measures include: removing the whistleblower's name from the complaint, creating a new layer of security, and limiting the individual's access to classified information.

The actions are the latest example of the White House's efforts to double down on its defenses in the face of public scrutiny.

The whistleblower's identity has been protected by the House Intelligence Committee, which is handling the investigation.

There are often different procedures and precautions in place to protect the whistle-blower's identity, including using a pseudonym and limiting their access to sensitive information.

Trump decision on Syria brings dire warnings

BY KAREN DEMUTH, MARK RYAN, KIMBERLY KROSS and SARAH BRIDGES

Republicans in Congress are divided over President Trump's decision to withdraw U.S. troops from Syria, raising concerns about the potential impact on regional stability and the fight against ISIS.

The move, announced in a surprise announcement on Sunday, came after Trump's administration had been working with other countries to ensure a smooth transition of power in the region.

Backlash rises after Trump clears way for Turkish strike on Kurds

Fighting US push back US troops
Outrage at home and abroad
Lira takes beating

"They have been fighting Turkey for decades. Later, in response to a mounting backlash from legislatures and international community. In our view, "Turkey has been a friend of ours. We are not going to fall silent on this issue," said a foreign policy analyst.

Turkey has launched an offensive against Kurdish forces in Syria, sparking widespread condemnation.

In Turkey, President Recep Tayyip Erdogan has said that the operation is necessary to protect Turkey's national interests and to prevent Kurdish armed groups from setting up a base near the border. The operation has been condemned by other countries, including the United States and the European Union, which have warned that it could lead to a new round of fighting in the region.

The Turkish military on Thursday launched an operation to take control of northern Syria, targeting Kurdish-led forces in the area. The operation is part of a larger effort by Turkey to contain Kurdish influence in the region.

The operation has sparked international condemnation, with many countries calling for a de-escalation of tensions.

Turkey's move has also been met with criticism from the United States, which has expressed concern about the potential for a new round of fighting in the region. The US has called for a diplomatic solution to the conflict.

The operation has also sparked concerns among other countries in the region, including Iraq and Syria, which have warned that it could lead to a new round of fighting in the region.

"Turkey has been a friend of ours. We are not going to fall silent on this issue," said a foreign policy analyst. "But Turkey is a very important country for us. We need to work with them to find a solution to this issue."

US accused of betrayal in diplomat row

Trump urged to waive immunity for agent's wife

Catherine Philp
Diplomatic Correspondent

The US has been accused of double standards and a betrayal of the special relationship for refusing to waive the diplomatic immunity of the wife of one of its agents who was killed in a fatal car crash.

If Washington does not change its stance Boris Johnson will personally ask President Trump to intervene tomorrow, citing a similar request from the US that Britain granted last year.

Anne Sacocois, 42, has immunity through her husband, Jonathan, 43, who worked for US intelligence at RAF Croughton, Northamptonshire.

She drove into 19-year-old Harry Dunn, who was on his motorbike outside the base on August 27 at 8.30pm and he died in hospital. Police confirmed that her Volvo XC90, also carrying her 11-year-old son, was on the wrong side of the road but while they sought to have her immunity waived the family fled to the US.

Mr Johnson said yesterday: ‘I do not think that it can be right to use the process of diplomatic immunity for this type of purpose. And I hope that Anne Sacocois will come back and will engage properly with the processes of law as they are carried out in this country.

Nick Audoisher, the chief constable of Northamptonshire, said that the US was abusing ‘a privilege that is afforded to diplomats throughout this country and throughout the world.’

Stephen Metcalfe, the county’s police and crime commissioner, called it a ‘breakdown of trust, almost a betrayal’ of the special relationship.

Tobias Ellwood, a former defence minister, said: ‘I want the US to do the honourable thing. The US needs to avoid the accusation of double standard given what happened in 1997, when it requested the waivering of immunity of a Georgian diplomat responsible for the death of a teenage girl in a major road traffic accident.

Radd Seiger, the lawyer representing Mr Dunn’s family, had ‘many examples’ of the US winning waivers from other countries. He added: ‘We are absolutely delighted that the prime minister has involved himself in our case. Britain has been of service to waive immunity for the husband of a British diplomat. Yassaf Amrouche, 31, who was arrested and charged with domestic violence in New York last year.

Demirci Reath, the foreign secretary, spoke to his counterpart, Mike Pompeo, by phone last night after a ‘frank’ conversation with Woody Johnson, the US ambassador, failed to yield results.

Mr Dunn’s mother, Charlotte Charles, said that it was ‘such a dishonourable thing to do’ for Ms Sacocois to leave the country. She told the BBC Victoria Derbyshire programme: ‘I would have stayed and faced it as a family. We could have found that for ourselves, but forking out for leaving. I’m nowhere now.’

Mr Dunn’s father, Tim, is head of maintenance at Winchester House School, attended by Mrs Sacocois’s three children for a few weeks before the incident. The school where fees are £10,000 a year, did not comment.

A case file is to be handed to the Crown Prosecution Service today. Intelligence sources said that efforts to win US co-operation would be limited in its effectiveness because of its decision to protect Mr Sacocois’s work.

Sources told The Times that staff given diplomatic cover mostly worked for the CIA. ‘If the CIA was involved then they would have had her out of there before the ambassador even knew’, a former intelligence official said.

The State Department expressed condolences to the Dunn family but said that the decision to lift immunity was rarely taken.
